

PREVAIL STUDY

Do you have breathing problems?

Our practice is taking part in a research study called PREVAIL. The study will assess a quality improvement programme called CONQUEST. This is a new way to find, and improve care and treatment for patients with a lung condition known as COPD or may be at risk of having this condition, who experience flare-ups of their symptoms.

As part of this research, de-identified data about our patients will be shared with the PREVAIL research team. This is data that does not have any information that would identify our patients. No personal details will be shared with the research team. However, personal data (NHS number, date of birth and gender) will be shared with NHS England, so they can provide hospital data to the research team about hospital attendances, admissions, treatment and deaths. Sharing of personal data is supported under 'section 251' by the Health Research Authority Confidentiality Advisory Group.

If you do not want your data to be shared for the PREVAIL study, you can opt out from sharing your data until 31st December 2025. This will not affect the care that you receive from us.

If you have any questions about this study or how your de-identified information is used, or you wish to withdraw from sharing your data for research purposes, please speak with a member of the practice team.
